THE VILLAGE PROG.

Under the Hiy pads and things
The big old builtrog squate;
His greenis, hide is thick, blings,
With warts, and lamps, and knots,
And when he swalls himself and siage
His voice is rough in spots.

His thighs are thick, and big, and strong; Yot he enjoys his case; And when the echoes of his song Are borne upon the breaze His normal slope, unless I'm wrong. Is forty-five degrees.

Week in, week out, from morn till Neek in, week out, from more the night,
You can hear his bellows blow;
You can hear him sound his gong, all right.
With measured best and slow,
Like a bruker spoiling for a fight
When there isn't any foe.

On Sundays come the viflage boys,
With fishing poles, red rage,
And sticks, and stones; and then his voice
Mysteriously lags.
He hides himself—he has no choice—
Down deep amid the flags.

Thanks, thanks to thee, my warts Thanks, thanks is friend.

For the lesson thou hast taught!

Edwin was invited to a birthday party, and was told he would be expected to sing a song. Not having had any experience in this fine art, he decided to do a bit of practicing at home. The following Sunday he went upstairs to try a song over. After he had been at it a few minutes a voice came from the foot of the stairs. Edwin: Edwin. "Yes mother!" "I'm surprised at you

"Yes, mothert" "I'm surprised at you sawing wood on a Sunday." A commercial man was rash enough to make a telephone trunk call when exceedingly short of time, and found, when he spoke, that he had been put on the wrong number. This was the more exasperating sell inexcusable as more exasperating size inexcusable as the number wanted was the simplest possible—No. I. What I want, he finished by declaring with savage dis-tinctions, "is one—on the trunk." And the operator who evidently knew some slang, retorted quietly: "Yes, you do."
